Implementation Regulations for the Qualifying Examination of the Ph.D. Program in Department of Geomatics

Approved by the Departmental Affairs Meeting on September 23, 1996

Revised by the Departmental Affairs Meeting on March 20, 2006

Revised by the Departmental Affairs Meeting on March 29, 2010

Revised by the Departmental Affairs Meeting on July 22, 2010

Revised by the Departmental Affairs Meeting on November 30, 2020

Revised by the Departmental Affairs Meeting on April 10, 2023

1. These Implementation regulations are established in accordance with the guidelines for the qualifying examination of Ph.D. candidates at National Cheng Kung University.
2. The qualifying examination is held once per semester. The department will announce the relevant matters and accept applications during the first week of the semester.
3. Graduate students who wish to take the examination must submit their applications within the specified deadline according to the announced regulations.
4. The qualifying examination consists of a written examination in the subject area and an oral comprehensive examination. Candidates must pass both examinations with satisfactory scores to be considered as having passed the qualifying examination.
5. The advisor recommends two examination committee members (including the advisor) for the written examination based on the expertise and subject areas of the candidates. The recommendation must be approved by two-thirds of the members of the academic committee.
6. The candidate must propose two subject areas for the written examination, which must be approved by the advisor. Each subject will be assigned to an examination committee member for question setting. The advisor cannot serve as the question setter for both subjects. The subject areas for the written examination must be approved by two-thirds of the members of the academic committee. Once the subject areas are approved, they cannot be changed unless the candidate changes their advisor and research direction during the course of study, subject to the restrictions stated in Article 14 of these regulations.

7. The written examination for the doctoral qualification can be exempted through the following two methods:
 - (1) If the course grade of a subject is among the top 20% (rounded down, with no decimal) of the passing students in the class, or if the number of students taking the course is fewer than five, and with the consent of the instructor. However, only the student with the highest grade can use this option.
 - (2) Publishing an SCI or SSCI article. One article can be used to exempt two subjects, but the applicant must be the sole first author or sole corresponding author of the article, and the article cannot be used for the application of the doctoral degree examination. The applicant must provide relevant documents to be reviewed by the academic committee.
8. The passing score for the written examination must be at least 70 points.
9. The advisor recommends four examination committee members (including the advisor) to the academic committee based on the expertise of the candidate. One of the committee members must be an academic committee member. If the examination committee does not include a current academic committee member, the academic committee will appoint one academic committee member to join the examination committee. The comprehensive oral examination should be scheduled within six months from the date of passing the written examination.
10. During the comprehensive oral examination, the candidate will first give a 30-minute presentation on their research proposal. The presentation should include the research background, literature review, research methods, research progress plan, expected outcomes, and references. The examination committee will ask questions and evaluate the candidate based on the research proposal and relevant topics covered in the written examination.
11. The passing score for the comprehensive oral examination is an average score of 70 or above from all the examination committee members, with at least three committee members giving a score of 70 or above.

12. The maximum duration for passing the qualifying examination is two years. The candidate must complete the first written examination within this time frame. If, due to exceptional circumstances, the candidate is unable to complete the qualifying examination within the specified time, including those who did not pass, they may submit a written request to the academic committee for a one-year extension. The extension request must be approved by two-thirds of the committee members. Regardless of the circumstances, a maximum of three extension requests can be submitted.
13. Candidates who fail to pass the qualifying examination due to an insufficient score in the comprehensive oral examination may retain the qualified scores obtained in the written examination with the unanimous agreement of the examination committee members.
14. Ph.D. students who have previously passed the qualifying examination but left the school for reasons and re-enroll within two years without changing their research field may have their written examination scores recognized. However, they still need to participate in the comprehensive oral examination and are subject to the restrictions stated in Article 12.
15. Graduate students have a maximum of two opportunities to take the qualifying examination. If they fail to pass on both attempts, they must withdraw from the university.
16. These regulations shall be implemented upon approval by the Departmental Affairs Meeting and submitted to the Office of Academic Affairs for record. Any amendments shall follow the same procedure.
